Vaudeville Blues, a novel set in Chicago in 1938, involves a young man whose mother, now deceased, had been in vaudeville. He grew up mostly with another family, because his mother was often on the road. In the beginning of the book he meets a young actress, is drawn to her, but is afraid of involving himself too deeply with someone who's in the theater. The story develops that relationship, explores his coming to terms with his past, and also introduces us to Vaudeville Blues, the book's namesake.
